SCOPE OF WORK

Background

King County Council passed ordinance 19318, as amended by ordinance 19443, directing $500,000 to the Andy Hill Cancer Research Endowment (CARE Fund) to address health disparities in King County that have been exacerbated due to the COVID-19 pandemic and to establish a more equitable workforce in the healthcare industry in King County.

This program seeks a set of recommendations for decisionmakers to address health disparities in the population of King County created or exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic, and to enhance access to community health services through establishment of a more equitable healthcare workforce.

Evergreen Social Impact is contracted to deliver program administration services to the Andy Hill Cancer Research Endowment (CARE) Fund, including financial and accounting management for the CARE Fund. Evergreen Social Impact's mission is to strengthen mission-driven organizations and achieve enduring impact in the Pacific Northwest by developing shared infrastructure and expertise, building a culture of partnership, and advancing equity. Evergreen Social Impact serves as fiscal sponsor for this King County grant to the CARE Fund and will be responsible for financial management of the grant and ensuring that all contract deliverables are completed. The CARE Fund will be responsible for leading the program implementation, including development and submission of the final report per the County's appropriation.

Racial/ethnic health disparities are higher rates of serious health conditions or deaths that affect communities of color. These disparities can result in shorter lifespans and lower quality of life, are rooted in inequities in the opportunities and resources needed for good health, such as education, employment, safe and healthy neighborhoods, and access to health care. These inequities are often the result of current and historical institutionalized racism or explicit racial bias.

Existing racial/ethnic health disparities were exacerbated and amplified by the COVID-19 pandemic. Due to historic and ongoing systemic racism and discrimination, people in certain race and ethnic groups experience worse social, economic, and health outcomes than other groups. These social, economic, and health conditions may place these groups at higher risk of severe COVID-19 illness and/or make them more likely to experience hardship due to the social distancing orders and economic impacts of the pandemic.

Among confirmed cases where race/ethnicity data is available, evidence indicates that COVID-19 deaths are disproportionately higher among certain communities of color. Data further show that people of color account for the majority of COVID-19 cases and deaths known among health care workers, and they are more likely to be in health care worker roles and settings that have particularly high risks of workplace exposure.

In addition to the disproportionate COVID-19 deaths among health care workers of color, the pandemic has driven burnout among health care workers to crisis levels. These impacts on the health care workforce are driving some stakeholders to call for systemic solutions to retain critical personnel while preparing a new generation to take the field.

The purpose of this program is to bring together stakeholders to develop a set of recommendations for decision makers to address population health disparities in King County created or exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic, and to enhance access to community health services through establishment of a more equitable healthcare workforce. The stakeholder process is designed to produce a set of recommended action steps for health care policy and service changes, including workforce issues.

Project

The CARE Fund will examine opportunities for building a more equitable healthcare workforce to address health disparities in King County that have been exacerbated due to the COVID-19 pandemic. A stakeholder group will work with a research lead (Principal Investigator) to assess the impacts of COVID-19 and resulting trends in the current healthcare workforce. An examination of models designed to mitigate negative COVID-19 impacts on the retention, recruitment, and development of an equitable healthcare workforce will be included in the final report. The report will highlight workforce-related promising ideas for addressing disparities in cancer prevention and cancer care in King County that were exacerbated due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The report will examine opportunities for building a more equitable healthcare workforce to address health disparities in King County that have been exacerbated due to the COVID-19 pandemic. This project is seeking to incorporate the good (e.g., creative outreach/technology solutions) learned from the pandemic to improve the complicated and cascading health access issues by proposing equitable workforce solutions to address such needs.

A final report will be provided to King County Council to address health disparities in the population of King County created or exacerbated by the coronavirus pandemic, and to enhance healthcare access. The final report may also be provided to the Governor-appointed board of directors of the Andy Hill Cancer Research Endowment (CARE) Fund.

Activities:

CARE Fund will convene three meetings of stakeholders representing labor, business, healthcare systems, and communities highly impacted by COVID-19. The meetings may be held virtually or in-person. The tentative objective(s) for each of the three meetings is outlined below:
